

The Resurrection part of the Easter Story from the Bible told in first person (as if someone is there).

As Peter sat speechless, Jesus continued. "What's more, one person here will be my betrayer. This is the last supper that I will share with you, for tomorrow I will die."

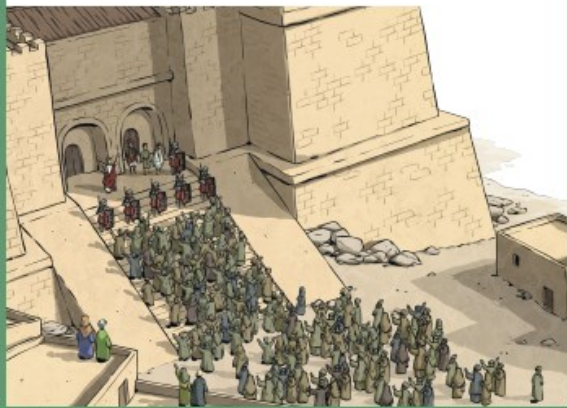

Some say he prayed so earnestly that an angel appeared to him and blessed him with strength for the trials ahead. He prayed so feverishly that sweat poured down his face. He prayed for so long that when he returned to his disciples, they were sleeping.

Pilate asked the crowd, "What crime is he guilty of?" Undeterred, the crowd chanted louder and louder.

At last, Pilate shrugged. "Fine. Barabbas will be freed and Jesus will be crucified. I wash my hands of this."

When they pushed Jesus outside, we saw what the soldiers had done. He was dressed in a richly-coloured robe, like a king. On his head rested a crown of thorns.

Above him hung a sign:

This is Jesus, King of the Jews.

The earth shook.

Quaking, the centurion who guarded Jesus cried out, "Surely, he was the Son of God!"

The women watched sombrely as Joseph's servant rolled a huge stone across the entrance of the tomb.

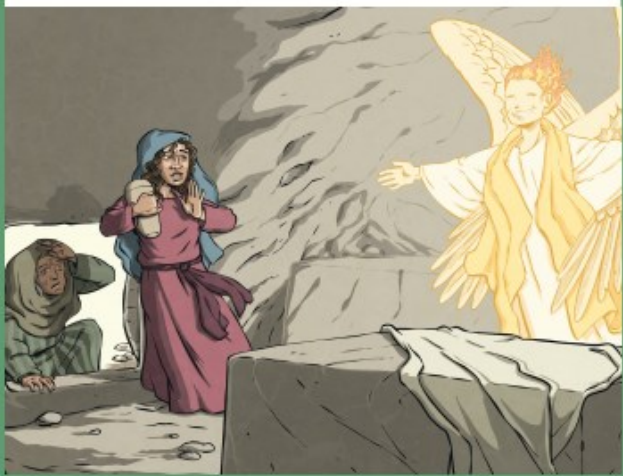

As they entered the garden, a sight greeted the women that made them stop in their tracks...

The stone covering the tomb's entrance had been rolled away.

Inside the tomb, they saw an angel with a face like lightning and robes as white as snow.

Some say that Jesus appeared to the women right there, in the garden. Some say that he met his disciples on the road to Emmaus, or on a mountain, or at a feast in Galilee. They all say that what he prophesied was fulfilled: that after he was crucified, he rose from the dead.
