

In Winter

In winter, many animals grow thick, furry coats as cold weather turns morning dew to frost. People wear layers and scarves around their throats to protect and ensure minimal body heat is lost.

Families lounge by a crackling fireplace while drinking warm, chocolatey drinks. Others can be found on an icy mountain face or skating on ponds and enclosed ice rinks.

Clear skies usually mean colder weather and less daylight means longer nights. In the wild, many animals huddle close together and some birds begin their southerly flights.
